

Chapter One: The Measurement

The quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog while a second sentence continues onto the following line so that the paragraph is genuinely several lines long and the justification stretches the interword spaces unevenly across each of them, which is exactly the case that matters here.

A ragged right paragraph does not stretch its spaces at all. It simply breaks where the line runs out, and every space on every line is the same width, which makes it the easy case to compare against the justified one above.

This line has bold Arial words and a larger size inside one otherwise ordinary Times paragraph, so a single line carries three different styles.
