

Chapter Three

A subheading set in a different family

This paragraph is deliberately long enough to wrap across several lines so that the grouping question can be answered honestly rather than by construction. A real producer decides for itself where one text object ends and the next begins, and that decision is the thing being measured here, not anything this test chose.

A second paragraph follows, containing the word café with a real acute accent, plus naïve, résumé and Zürich, so that non-ASCII text in an embedded subset font is present in the file.

Small print at eight points in a lighter colour.
